Wind Loading on Buildings Building Research Establishment,1999

Wind Loading on Buildings N. Cook, R. Narayanan, 1999 This Part is the second of a three part Digest giving brief guidance on the use of BS 6399 2 Part 1 gives advice and guidance on implementing BS 6399 2 and suggests certain options This Part demonstrates the recommended options by example calculations for the case of a two storey timber frame house Part 3 gives example calculations for a further two building types a steel portal frame building and a 15 storey office tower surrounded by a two storey podium This Digest is aimed at architects engineers and professionals who need to know the effect of wind on buildings and design options that minimise it

The Assessment of Wind Loads, 1989 This is the principal Digest in a series which is compatible with the forthcoming British Standard BS 6399 Part 2 As this new Standard incorporates several changes from the previous CP3 Chapter V Part 2 1972 it is considered appropriate to introduce this series of Digests by providing some background and guidance to the new provisions This Digest considers the assessment of wind loads on domestic commercial and industrial buildings and their associated ancillary constructions It describes the procedures used in assessing wind loads the principal changes in practice between the old BS and its replacement the response to wind effects of different structures the wind climate and the derivation of wind speeds to be used in design load assessment and pressure coefficients

Using the Engineering Literature Bonnie A. Osif, 2006-08-23 The field of engineering is becoming increasingly interdisciplinary and there is an ever growing need for engineers to investigate engineering and scientific resources outside their own area of expertise However studies have shown that quality information finding skills often tend to be lacking in the engineering profession Using the Engineerin
